WHICH TENT IS RIGHT FOR ME?

TENTTYPE - With so many tents to choose from, your first step is to think about what's right for your adventure! Consider a lightweight weekender tent (pop-up or pole) for a short trip with a few people, and step up to a more durable option for multi-day trips like a trekking holiday. If the whole family is going away, a classic four to nine person tent will be right for you, your gear and your layout. Tunnel tents have larger living spaces, while dome tents offer more standing height.

NUMBER OF PEOPLE - Once you know how many people will sleep in your tent, remember to add equipment and any pets to the equation. In general, a single sleeping space will suit one to three campers, while family tents will either have a much larger bedroom area, or many rooms. Size up each space to make sure you can comfortably lie down without touching the sides of your tent.

CAMPING OR BACKPACKING? - If your trip will last anything from a few days to a few weeks in one place, a campsite tent is your most spacious and comfortable option. It provides an accommodating living area – either one with good standing room, or one with plenty of seating space. However, for backpacking, you'll be moving around different sites, so a lightweight, compact choice is easiest to transport and set up.

WATERPROOF

A full-coverage rain fly protects against rain and wind and keeps every camper warm, but you may only need a roof-only fly, which allows for more light and good views of the scenery.

Choose weather-proof materials – Consider a higher-denier fabric canopy and rain fly, as well as seam tape and high-denier floors, to lower the chance of leaks.

UV RATING

Exposure to ultraviolet (UV) light will degrade the quality of your tent's fabric over time, so a higher UV rating gives assurance of longer use.

DARK ROOM

With a purpose-designed dark room, you'll block light when you most need sleep, such as in the early morning and those times during the day when you need to take an extra nap.
